“ I am flooded with memories of Jo. She was and still is an instrumental piece of why my two girls or as she would call them “my grand babies” are who they are today. She was such an influential part of their lives at a crucial point she will always live on in them as they grow and mature.

God’s timing: James, I, & Isabel (as Jo calls her) moved in right next door to her just after her Ray passed away. As James worked hard & I was on strict bed rest being pregnant with Lauren. Jo jumped on caring for us - making meals, checking on us, played with Bella, Isabel (at the time only 1yr old), Jo pushed her around the neighborhood in her little stroller showing her flowers, talking to her about all the things, James was able to help Jo with odds & ends at her place, we all shared meals together, even went through tornadoes together with me 7 months pregnant, Jo, and Isabel all in our bathtub - laughing, After I had baby Lauren, Jo would rock her for hours, and then push them both around talking to them. When James & I moved it was sad & not the same, but, Jo stayed a part of our family. Jo remained involved sending girls stickers & cards in the mail, we would be together holidays, we would see her on weekends, the girls loved exploring when she had her flowers & humming birds, they would swing on the swing, Jo knew about school activities, girls made cards for military for Jo, we did back to school shopping together, Christmas shopping & Jo always knew when the girls won an award. God knew we all needed each other and I’m forever grateful for Jo in our lives.
